How to be a gang leader for a day

You can ask, tell the Speakers. What's working somewhere? Or as Google says, working from here in the office. While the vaccines expand, some of us are not ready to return to normal. In this edition of Gillmor Gang, the office is a mental state, served by Zoom and Clubhouse. Play as Clownhouse, with unlimited fungible bozos on the menu. Surely we're unbalanced, the elections recalled, floating in a pot of alphabet VC soup. SPACs are everywhere and nowhere, water-cooled conversations that disguise themselves as large ticket conferences, looney right wing looking for blanket forgiveness. And are we asking for permission to stay at home in our digital workshops? Yes, it will probably work for a second heat, but when research measures what has actually changed. After a year of nightmare life, some of us are ready for everything except the rest of our lives. The other day in Clubhouse, they celebrated Hal Willner's life and time, an extraordinary record producer who suddenly died of COVID at 64. My colleague from Gang Michael Markman sent me a Clubhouse notification that suggests I want to listen, and I did. I knew Hal a little bit, I worked with him on some of his projects, and I made the mistake that we all make too often to assume that he or she would be around for the rest of the time. So I clicked on the link and found myself in a room full of people who knew him much better. It was cathartic to hear them try to describe the boy, his life work, his day work on Saturday Night Live, and his magical series of projects that couple the strangest combinations of artists that you could not even imagine. But he did. So, when we begin to understand this new world in which we were pushed, the normality we are modeling out of the suggestions that the virus left us on what iswe all knew Willner and the malicious glint in her eye just enough to want just a little more help right now. His friends were on foot safe in this crazy foolthat is curious from all over the world. some saw him as a mentor, others as a collaborator, I with the twin of remorse to not be brave enough to appreciate the short window in this gentle giant for the luck of the encounter. I knew it was special, I knew it didn't matter how or why we all got there at a certain time, and here there was clubhouse that needed a human experience only possible because people like hal seized these moments of the days they passed. Yet it is easy to say that these new constructs are built as a card house, which the hype will fade, economic atrophy, the great getting bigger, can be all true, but what part of the really great clubhouse or medium or substack idea is really vulnerable? there is where political posture becomes as much as nothing, just because the current or pivoted business model is suspicious does not mean that success is not clinging right around the corner. If the world is suddenly toxic, does this preclude the idea that adaptation to emergency can produce new realities that can improve on the nature of conventional reality? Take medium for a second, the writing platform has announced a blogging flashback, blogrolls, as a new feature to amplify affection signals for favorite authors, the media analysis is exploited to project an organic-updating list of favorites follows informed by recent authors updates, for readers, this is a convenient hybrid of social and feed; for writers an incentive to earn a timely traction in the community of what we call the social cloud on twitter. It is simple in execution but deep in purpose, as it encourages you to post to medium, the platform has recently moved away from financing original content after losing the step from eye-oriented advertising, but this new function could be a way tothe existing architecture to finance the growth of strategic analysis. The more you deliver the signal to the following notification flow, the more you trigger the handclaps handclaps pumptime to click metrics, which increases the strength of the blogroll signal and so goes. Can you ask yourself, what does this have to do with working somewhere? Well, the idea that you can feed a self-healing community of colleagues through digital technologies is right at the top of the list of things we want to do to strengthen the new economy. While the audio is seen as a subtractor from the video, it is additional in terms of expanding the user base beyond the so-called creators to the so-called doers, people moving products and services from place to place. It is radio, a flow of news companion, music, soap box, ideas, alerts, reminders and coffee break that feeds the day and lights the night.
